The National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations is pleased to provide the eighth edition of the Council Chronicle, the Council's newsletter. The Chronicle seeks to keep the Council's supporters informed and updated by presenting news and special reports on the Council's year-round educational programs, events, and activities. For new readers interested in learning more about the Council's vision and mission, together with the ways and means it utilizes to pursue both, please visit the Council's Web site at www.ncusar.org.

About the National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations

Founded in 1983, the National Council is an American educational, non-profit, non-governmental organization dedicated to improving American knowledge and understanding of the Arab world. It endeavors to do this through leadership development, people-to-people programs, academic seminars, an annual Arab-U.S. policymakers' conference, specialized publications, and the participation of American students and faculty in Arab world study abroad and Arabic language learning experiences as well as intensive year-round and summer university student internships, combined with an academic seminar in the nation's capital.

The Council's vision for the U.S.-Arab relationship is one that rests on a solid, enduring foundation of strategic, economic, political, commercial, and defense cooperation, strengthened continuously by exchanges of present and emerging leaders among Americans and Arabs alike.

The Council's mission is educational. It seeks to enhance American awareness and appreciation of the multi-faceted and innumerable benefits the United States has long derived from its relations with the Arab world.

In pursuit of its mission, the Council serves as a U.S.-Arab relations programmatic, informational, and human resources clearinghouse. In so doing, it provides cutting edge information and insight to national, state, and local grassroots organizations, media, and public policy research institutes, in addition to select community civic, religious, business, and professional associations.

UPCOMING:
Summer 2010 Washington, DC Internship Program
June 1 – August 6, 2010

The National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations' Washington, DC Summer Internship Program provides undergraduate and graduate students a professional, academic, and career opportunity internship in the Nation's Capital. The program combines professional work experiences with a parallel two-month series of seminars. By design, the primary focus of the academic component of the program centers on a sub-region of the Arab countries, the Middle East, and the Islamic world: Arabia and the Gulf. Priority consideration for acceptance into the program and students granted one of the 25 Fellowships is accorded alumni of the Council's premier national youth leadership development program, the Model Arab League. [For more information on the Model Arab League, visit www.ncusar.org/modelarableague, or see Council Chronicle, Vol. 3, No. 2, 2009, pages 6 - 9 at www.ncusar.org/pubs].

The program is administered by National Council professionals and staff in association with more than two dozen among America and the Arab world's foremost scholars and foreign affairs practitioners. The programs, activities, and functions represented by the organizations and corporations that provide the professional work experience component of the program are varied. Included are international educational development and exchange, youth leadership, bimonthly and quarterly publications, humanitarian relief, satellite television media, academic area studies, international transportation, foreign trade, and peace and justice advocacy.

The goals of the academic component of the program are to introduce the interns to: (1) an in-depth examination and analysis of the one part of the Arab world and planet as a whole -- Arabia and the Gulf -- to which, in the past quarter of a century and counting, the United States has mobilized and deployed more armed forces, spent more taxpayers dollars, with the result that more Americans, Arabs, and others have died or been wounded than anyplace else on earth; and (2) a range of internationally renowned... specialists with extensive firsthand knowledge of and experience with the cultures, societies, systems of governance, political dynamics, and economies as well as foreign relations of the nine countries -- Bahrain, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, and Yemen -- that comprise the region of Arabia and the Gulf; and (3) the realities as opposed to the myths embedded in textbooks and what passes for established thought, informed opinion, and conventional wisdom regarding the actual behind-the-scenes dynamics of analysis and advocacy as they relate to the foreign policy making process towards Arabs and Muslims in the nation's capital.

The objectives of the office employment component of the program are, among others, to provide interns a firsthand opportunity to develop the kinds of skills that derive from: (1) a real-life practical work experience in an institution that deals in one way or another on a day-to-day basis with one or more aspects of Arab-U.S. relations; (2) firsthand participation in the dynamics of Arab-U.S. relations intra- and inter-organizational activities; (3) the practice of personal and professional discipline, punctuality, time management, report writing, administrative operations and logistics, attention to the specificity of details, project completion, instructional implementation, strategic planning, appreciating the need for efficiency and cost-effectiveness, external liaison and representation, and issue definition as well as assignment execution and follow-up.

A side benefit of the program is regarded by many as priceless. It consists of the chance for participants to meet and establish informal mentoring relations with some of the program's administrators and guest lecturers as well as their employers, some of whom each year end up offering full-time jobs to the interns in their employ. In addition, interns have the opportunity to become friends with like-minded participants their own age and, with them, to experience the joys of learning on their own how to navigate the many cultural attractions and the numerous museums and sites of historical significance in the nation's capital.

The possibilities for personal and professional advancement inherent in the academic and work experience, combined with the skills they help to inculcate and develop, together with the extensive exposure to one of the world's most dynamic capitals, are limited only by the imagination. They include but are not limited to preparation designed to enhance the participants' prospects for embarking upon, among other possibilities, public and private sector careers in business and/or the worlds of diplomacy, academe, public affairs, the media, and humanitarian relief agencies as well as the arena of nonprofit and nongovernmental educational and philanthropic organizations.

Upon successful fulfillment of the program's academic and internship work experience requirements, participants receive a $1,000 fellowship stipend.

Additional information about the program, along with application materials and copies of the last two summer's week-to-week activities from early June to mid-August, are available on the National Council's Web site www.ncusar.org.
Summer Study Abroad Opportunities for Students

The National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations is pleased to partner with the Yemen College of Middle Eastern Studies and Lebanese American University to offer students opportunities to study in the Middle East. Programs for Summer 2010 include:

Yemen College of Middle Eastern Studies

Programs:

The Yemen College of Middle Eastern Studies houses two main academic programs: the Program in Contemporary Middle Eastern Studies and the Program in Arabic Language. Students enrolled in the college may focus entirely on Arabic language instruction, the Program in Contemporary Middle Eastern Studies, or, as is more likely, a combination of the two. On whatever course work students embark, the college provides a unique learning opportunity for degree-seeking international study-abroad students, as well as for people from all walks of life and all stages of career. Students learn Arabic and study contemporary culture and affairs in the region, and do so while living in one of the most interesting countries in the Middle East.

Summer 2010 Dates:

Term 7: June 6th - July 7th
Term 8: July 11th - August 11th
Term 9: August 15th - September 22nd

Lebanese American University

Programs:

The Summer Institute for Intensive Arabic Language and Culture (SINARC) at Lebanese American University, Beirut Campus, is a multi-faceted language and cultural immersion program that welcomes students from all over the world. The campus situated in the heart of the Lebanese capital provides students a unique perspective on Lebanese culture and daily life.

Summer 2010 Dates:

The six-week Summer program (June 28 - August 6, 2010) is offered at four levels: Elementary, Upper Elementary, Intermediate and Advanced. A separate eight-credit course in Lebanese Dialect will be offered provided there is sufficient enrollment.

“Fresh Visions, Old Realities, New Possibilities: The Impact of Leadership Change on Arab-U.S. Relations”

Nine months into the new administration of American President Barack Obama, Arab-U.S. relations remain profoundly impacted by the multifaceted variants of the global economic recession and challenged by uncertainties bearing on the prospects for international and regional stability and security as well as prosperity. Acknowledging the critical importance of these issues yet also recognizing dramatic new opportunities for development and cooperation, an international audience of nearly 1,000 Arab and American diplomats, political, military, business, professional, media, and academic leaders convened at the Ronald Reagan Building and International Trade Center for the 18th Annual Arab-U.S. Policymakers Conference October 15-16, organized by the National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations. Chaired by the National Council’s President and CEO, Dr. John Duke Anthony and the Chairman of its Board of Directors, Rear Admiral Harold J. Bernsen (USN, Ret.), the two-day conference focused on the theme, “Fresh Visions, Old Realities, New Possibilities: The Impact of Leadership Change on Arab-U.S. Relations.”

This year’s Policymakers Conference set records at every level - the largest registration and attendance ever and the largest media contingent in the Conferences' history, representing not only print and broadcast media but internet publications and the blogosphere as well, all supported by a record number of Conference Sponsors. Included among the latter were more than twenty Fortune 500 American Corporations, more than ten international business and trade organizations, and nine Arab embassies as well as the Washington, D.C. Office of the 22-member country League of Arab States -- the world's oldest regional organization (pre-dating the establishment of the United Nations) dedicated to the peaceful resolution of international disputes. Always intended to build bridges between the Arab countries, the Islamic world, and the United States, this year’s Conference visibly also spanned generations of prominent American, Arab, and other foreign affairs practitioners.

Current and former policymakers offered a range of lessons learned from mistakes made and successes achieved based on their respective experiences and insights; renowned scholars exchanged their analyses with Arab and American diplomats and corporate leaders; Arab media representatives shared their assessments of President Obama’s outreach efforts to the millions of Arab Christians and Muslims and the broader Islamic world comprised of 57 nations, together with their prognoses for near term progress as well as the implications of a continued inability to achieve definitive peaceful resolutions to some of the region's more difficult, dangerous, and challenging conflicts.

From beginning to end, one American and Arab specialist after another provided an extraordinary array of context and analysis meriting serious and favorable consideration by the policymaking establishments on both sides. Throughout, American and Arab presenters alike contributed perspectives and recommendations warranting immediate attention by incumbent policymakers and their constituencies in the Arab world and the United States, while educating and inspiring many among the current generation of students on the threshold of becoming the emerging Arab-U.S. relations leaders of tomorrow.

Traditionally focused on promoting dialogue among policymakers, this year’s Conference also included recognition of the role that the arts and humanities play in enhancing cultural encounter, underscoring the human element in decision making, and giving vent to some of the heartfelt emotions shared by millions the world over. For example, the Conference opened with long time Dean of the White House Correspondents, Ms. Helen Thomas, being presented a “Lifetime Achievement Award for Pioneering Excellence in Journalism.” The award citation read, “For excellence in political reporting, for courage in posing perceptive and challenging questions, for demanding accountability from those in power, for persistence in the pursuit of truth, and for bringing great distinction to her Arab American heritage.”

In addition, the World Children’s Choir, from northern Virginia and directed by Ms. Sondra Harnes, performed at the Thursday conference luncheon singing a selection of worldwide songs, one of which had been translated into Arabic. Throughout the conference there was also a showing of the paintings of Iraqi artist Ahmad Al Karkhi, now living in the Washington, D.C. area with refugee status.

U.S. Department of State Bureau of Near East Affairs Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Ambassador Ronald Schlicher opened the conference by discussing the Obama administration’s emphasis on “principled and sustained engagement based on the principles of mutual interest and mutual respect.” Applied to the real world of diplomacy, the idealism embedded in these conceptual formulations, in his view, has served to “diminish the notion that the United States is innately hostile to certain peoples, to certain states, and to certain leaders. In a very real sense,” he suggested, “we can remove a lot of the excuses that countries have used to evade the substance and the sincerity of the grievances and concerns expressed by the United States.” He then proceeded to provide a status report on key issues in U.S.-Arab relations covering Iran, Palestinian-Israeli peace prospects, Syria, Lebanon, Iraq and continuing concerns about the Hizbollah as well as Hamas movements in Lebanon and the Israeli Occupied Palestinian Territories, respectively.

A Conference highlight was a spirited exchange in the Ambassadors’ Roundtable featuring Ambassador Adel A. Al-Jubeir, Saudi Arabia’s Ambassador to the United States, and Ambassador James B. Smith, newly confirmed U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia, that was moderated by Mr. Peter Robertson, Co-Chairman of the U.S.-Saudi Arabian Business Council. Adding perspective to the discussion were four former United States Ambassadors to Saudi Arabia – Walter Cutler, Charles W. Freeman, Jr., James Oberwetter, and Robert Jordan. Ambassador Al-Jubeir observed that, “When you look at the challenges we face involving piracy or terrorism, financial crisis, energy situations, and trade and investment, I believe that the interests of our two countries at this moment are aligned as they have never been before.”

Ambassador Smith reinforced these ideas, “This is a much more nuanced, complicated and I would argue more important relationship than it has ever been in the past.” He continued, “I see my biggest challenge over the next two years is figuring out how to develop friendships without fences, relationships without barriers. Even if you can’t change the physical dynamic [of security concerns] we have got to get out and represent the American people to the people of Saudi Arabia.”

More than a month and a half later at a National Council-organized and sponsored Capitol Hill seminar on Yemen for Congressional staff, representatives of the international diplomatic corps, the media, public policy research institutes, and many other organizations, one of the lead speakers, former U.S. Ambassador to Kuwait James Larocco, repeated Amb. Smith’s call for developing “friendships without fences, relationships without barriers.” In so doing, he underscored what Amb. Smith had emphasized as the principle theme of his appeal -- that the United States government needed urgently to reach out to Yemen and its people in the country's hour of massive need for economic, employment, and related assistance from its international partners, friends, and allies.

Congressman Keith Ellison (Representative of the Fifth District of Minnesota and Member of the Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party), the first Muslim elected to the United States Congress and the first African-American elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from Minnesota, offered a viewpoint from the Congress, where he serves on the Middle East and South Asia Subcommittee of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and on the House Committee on Finance. Building on these committee assignments and acknowledging that Americans and Arabs have “to build our body of knowledge about each other on the micro-level and the global-level in order to understand each other better,” Representative Ellison noted that, “business is an excellent way to do that. You and I both know that politics can be combustible, but business is something you can come to a meeting of the minds on. When you do a business deal what you’re saying is this ... helps me, and it helps you, and we wouldn’t do a deal unless those two things were true. And, so, there is a point of agreement, a point of coming together, that we should start with but absolutely not end with.”

Conference panel discussions included a wide range of specialist views designed to illuminate areas of disagreement as well as large areas of shared interest and common concern, allowing the audience to pose questions that touched on some of the most sensitive and controversial areas of Arab-U.S. relations. Individual sessions dealt with such policy-related geopolitical challenges as “Iran and Regional Security,” “Israel and Palestine,” and “Iraq’s Return to Sovereignty” as well as policy issues pertaining to “Syria and Lebanon.” Additional sessions addressed policy considerations associated with such topical issues as: “Energy Dynamics for Producers and Consumers,” “Defense Cooperation and Enhancing Regional Security,” “Development and Education,” and “The Obama Administration: Reactions from the Arab Media.”

As on numerous previous occasions, the 18th Annual Arab-U.S. Policymakers Conference concluded with an overall assessment of U.S.-Arab relations offered by Ambassador Charles W. (“Chas”) Freeman, Chairman of the Board of Projects International, Inc. and a former Assistant Secretary of Defense for Regional Security Affairs, Ambassador to Saudi Arabia, and Immediate Past President of the Middle East Policy Council. Though President Obama “clearly signaled that he recognizes the imperative of solving the Israel-Palestine conflict and repairing American relations with Arabs and Muslims, if the United States is to enjoy peace and tranquility at home,” Freeman observed, “his administration has made only minimal changes to longstanding American policies that are conspicuous failures.” “Time,” Freeman said, “is running out on the prospects for peaceful engagement between Israel, the Palestinians, other Arabs, and non-Arab Muslims. No peace is conceivable without the full use of American moral and economic leverage to bring Israel to the negotiating table,” he added. “Peace with the Palestinians,” he concluded, “would enable Israel for the first time to be accepted as a legitimate part of the Middle East. It would end the conflict in the Holy Land. It is the key to de-radicalization of the Arab and Muslim worlds and to ending their violent backlash against the West. It is the prerequisite for the restoration of peace within the realm of Islam.”

Ambassador Freeman's incisive and well-timed remarks were once again accorded the widespread acclaim to which the National Council's yearly Arab-U.S. Policymakers Conference participants and attendees have become accustomed. The text of his address, together with the full two-day program and list of conference speakers as well as transcripts, video, and audio recordings of the proceedings are available on the National Council on U.S.-Arab Relations website www.ncusar.org.
The 2009 Arab-U.S. Policymakers Conference featured an exhibition of the work of Iraqi artist Ahmad Al Karkhi, who lives in the Washington, D.C. area with refugee status.
