

The State of Palestine

MAL FACT SHEET

SUMMARY

The State of Palestine is a country in the southern Levant region of the Middle East, or West Asia. It is comprised of two disconnected territories: The West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The territory between the two territories was once a part of Palestine. After the Balfour Declaration, a portion of the land had been allotted for the Jewish state of Israel, and more territory had subsequently been conquered and controlled by Israel.

President: Mahmoud Abbas (Palestine and the Palestinian National Authority), Yahya Sinwar (Party Leader of the Islamic Resistance Movement (HAMAS) in Gaza)

Capital: Jerusalem, Ramallah

Gov Type: Semi-Presidential System Multiparty Republic/Authoritarian Regime

Population: 2.14 million (Gaza), 3.24 million (West Bank)

Colonial History: Formerly Ottoman Empire (1516-1918), Captured by Egypt (1831-1840), Formerly British Mandate of Palestine (1922), Establishment of Israel (1948)

GEOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

Due to the way that the United States classifies the State of Palestine, information will be listed between the Gaza Strip and the West Bank individually. The Gaza Strip is 360 sq km, which is slightly more than twice the size of Washington, D.C, and the West Bank is 5,860 sq km, which is slightly smaller than the state of Delaware.

The climate of the Gaza strip is temperate with mild winters and dry and warm to hot summers, while the climate in the West Bank is similar with varying temperature and precipitation depending on altitude.

The terrain in the Gaza Strip is flat to rolling, with a sand and dune-covered coastal plain, while the terrain in the West Bank is mostly rugged, dissected upland in the west with flat plains descending to the Jordan River Valley to the east.

The natural resources in the Gaza Strip are arable land and natural gas, with just arable land in the West Bank. Droughts are the main natural hazards the region faces.

MAIN POLITICAL CONTENTIONS

The State of Palestine exists in a unique position on the world stage, where it is not recognized by many countries around the world, including the United States. After the fall of the Ottoman Empire, the allied powers divided the former territories amongst themselves, and The British received the Mandate of Palestine in the Sykes-Picot Agreement, with the stated intention to set up the territories for self-determination. In the Balfour Declaration, the British promised the Zionists in Europe that it would establish a "national home" for the Jewish people in Palestine, despite the fact that Britain had previously promised Arabs independence should they rebel against the Ottoman Empire in the Hussein-McMahon correspondence.

In 1947, despite Arab resistance to the establishment of a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine and violent revolts, the United Nations created a partition plan entitled Resolution 181, which separated the land once all known as Palestine into Palestine and Israel for the Arabs and the Jews respectively, allotting fifty-five percent of the land for Israel and the city of Jerusalem, a holy city for all of the Abrahamic religions, was declared a separate internationalized territory.

Despite the plan, Israel has taken over much of the area allotted for Palestine and created Jewish settlements in the West Bank that are illegal under international law and there have been numerous wars and violent fighting since the establishment of Israel. PAGE 02
